

Community School Third-Graders Donate Art

The Community School's third-grade class recently revealed its donation to the St. Luke's Wood River Fine Art Collection. The class chose to support the hospital's art program, donating funds for an art display box to showcase student artwork.

The student art display box was funded by the young philanthropists in conjunction with WOW Projects, a local organization committed to educating students about the importance of generosity.

The students crafted the first student art exhibit, which features adorable "ugly dolls." The students imagined, stuffed, and stitched the dolls themselves. The art display box will continually rotate student artwork to spread good cheer throughout the second floor of St. Luke's.

Alongside the hospital-wide fine art collection, the students' generosity will enhance the experience of all St. Luke's visitors, volunteers, patients, and staff.
